MAYOR BLISS ON THE HEALTH OF PENSACOLA

Gives Number of Deaths Which Have Occurred During the Past One Hundred and Fifty-Seven Days, and Shows City to Be In Excellent Condition.

Editor Pensacola Journal:

Now that the yellow fever epidemic has passed and become a matter of history I desire to refer to the health record of this city during the past five months, which period includes the yellow fever epidemic, and I do this, not for the purpose of drawing attention to the yellow fever but to show that Pensacola, even with a yellow fever epidemic is more healthful than many cities in the United States which have no epidemic.

I have had the city clerk compile the record of deaths since the first day of July, 1905, until the 24th day of November, inclusive and the record is very interesting indeed.

This covers a period of one hundred and fifty-seven days, during which there has been 213 deaths. According to the records made by Dr. Porter there were eighty-two deaths ascribed to yellow fever. The records of the city do not make such a showing, as only sixty-three deaths were reported to the board of health by the physicians as caused by yellow fever. It is very evident that some of the deaths were ascribed to some of the complications instead of being ascribed to yellow fever, which was probably the chief cause of death. In fact a number of people died with yellow fever who had several other ailments, and the attending physician selected the one in making his report that suited him best.

Two of the deaths were accredited to yellow jaundice, and four of the deaths were accredited to malarial fever, and four of the deaths to pneumonia, and four of the deaths to dengue fever, and one death to rabies, and two of the deaths to accidental poisoning, and seven of the deaths to convulsions and one of the deaths to congestive chill, and a number of the deaths to various causes, undoubtedly many of which were complicated with yellow fever, and some of which were yellow fever entirely.

Be that as it may, the city's record stands sixty-three deaths from yellow fever, and the state board of health record stands eighty-two deaths as caused by yellow fever. Each reader may harmonize the matter to suit himself.

In connection with this record I am very desirous of calling the attention thereto for the sole purpose of showing up the unequal record of Pensacola as a healthful city.

The healthfulness of a city cannot be computed from the mere number of deaths but from the causes of these deaths. Taking the most unfavorable view of the matter; and elimininating 63 deaths ascribed to yellow fever by the city's reports, we have left one hundred and fifty deaths, or a little less than one a day ascribed to all other causes. If those causes be typhoid fever, diphtheria, malarial fever, etc., etc., and the people who died were a class of people who were strong and robust, and in the prime of life, the showing would be much more unfavorable than if most of these died of old age or of accidents.

Now I have carefully gone over this record and I find that ten of these deaths were the result of accidents, and that three of them were murders, making a total of thirteen; that twenty-five of these deaths were those of infants, stillborns, or of premature or accidents in relation thereto. Twenty-seven of these deaths were of people over sixty years of age who had lived out their allotted period of time, which makes a total of sixty-five deaths that could in no wise be reckoned with the healthfulness of the community.

Eliminating these deaths that are not caused from unhealthful conditions, and counting those that were caused by yellow fever we still have a death record of only 138 deaths for 157 days which is a remarkable showing for a city that has been through the throes of a yellow fever epidemic.

Eliminating the accidental deaths, and those of infants and old age and the sixty-three deaths ascribed to yellow fever we have only 85 deaths that might be ascribed to the unhealthful conditions for a period of one hundred and fifty-seven days, or an average of 17 deaths a month, and I doubt if there is a city the size of Pensacola in the United States, or in the world that can show such a favorable record.

Counting the accidental deaths, and the deaths from yellow fever and the infants, and those of old age, and taking it all in all the health record of Pensacola is still better than that of many cities in the United States.

These are facts that are well worth knowing, and well worth considering, for Pensacola is to-day without a doubt the healthiest city in the Union. Although the yellow fever has just been stamped out the death record for the month of November is only seventeen deaths for the 24 days of the month that have gone by.

Yours very respectfully,
CHAS. H. BLISS,
Mayor.

SAGE LEAVES

Special to The Journal.

Brent, Fla., Nov. 25.—The great event of the week has been the withdrawal of the quarantine lines around Pensacola.

"General Frost" has not yet put in an appearance—the average date for his first visitation being the fifth of next month.

The refugees and "Border Ruffians" who have so long been shut out are enjoying the freedom of the city as of old, and the on-line market places are abandoned by all.

The fiery fever and incendiary flames have consigned many inhabitants to the graveyards, and reduced costly buildings to heaps of ruins.

Alas! how many friends we may ever seek in vain, whose lovely faces were wreathed in smiles when last we met, before the attack of the deadly foe.

Those who escaped to higher latitudes from the "association" with infected stevedores can have but a faint conception of the "torments" inflicted upon us by the health authorities, to save our lives!

Prof. Allen was lucky to get refuge in an up-country school house where he has enjoyed himself so well that he seems to be almost weaned off from old associates at Brent. He proposes returning home on a deer-turkey hunt about Christmas.

I have received a letter from Mr. W. P. Stewart, who left here with his family for California about the time the fever broke out in Pensacola. They were 7 days on the route to San Diego, a city of 30,000 inhabitants, only 16 miles from Mexico, on the Pacific Coast, 130 miles from Los Angeles. There are scarcely any policemen, perhaps owing to the predominance of aged people who go there in search of health.

The Stewarts send their best wishes to all Floridians.

Mrs. Essie Stephens has moved back to Pensacola and will resume her musical task, of teaching the children how to "play."

The sugar cane crop appears to be good in this neighborhood. Several farmers are getting in machinery for manufacturing it into syrup as chewing is too tedious for the out put of 1905.
